Graduate Pathways to Success and UBC Library Workshop
Copyright for your Thesis: how to use images and other material

Wednesday, June 3rd, 2015, 10:30 AM to 12:00 PM
Thea Koerner House, 6371 Crescent Road, Point Grey Campus

Are you in the midst of writing your thesis? Are there images or portions of published manuscripts you are planning to use in your thesis? Do you have concerns over how copyright laws could delay your thesis submission?

In this session you will learn:

1. to examine your thesis for copyright compliance
2. the laws relating to using copyrighted images
3. to identify copyright material
4. about creative commons licenses
5. about using material from online resources
6. about author rights

The last segment of the workshop will include an opportunity for students to work one-on-one with the IP and Copyright librarian on copyright matters relating to their theses.

Presenter: Peter D James is the IP & Copyright Services Librarian. Peter oversees the daily operations of the Scholarly Communications & Copyright Office. His role involves liaising with academic faculties and departments, coordinating campus instruction on copyright and author rights, responding to copyright-related questions, and investigating the copyright status of selected materials. He provides operational assistance to the Director, Library Digital Services in the provision of copyright and intellectual property services to UBC users.

Registration: Priority will be given to UBC graduate students registered in the current academic session. To register, please visit https://community.grad.ubc.ca/gps/event/12878

Applicants will receive confirmation within two working days of their registration. If you have difficulty with registration, send an email to graduate.pathways@ubc.ca

Refreshments: Beverages will be provided. Please bring your own mug.
